Tokyo University of Foreign Studies Academic Guide 1999-2000

Welcome from the President

Tokyo University of Foreign Studies, an institution with a long history and tradition, pursues education and research in world languages and cultures, area studies and international relations. We aim to develop in students the capabilities necessary for international activities, as well as contributing to cultural advancement through international understanding. TUFs has consistently furthered these fundamental goals, producing large numbers of competent graduates who have become leaders in various fields of international study and exchange. I welcome you to our university, which is unique in Japan for its extensive and in-depth coverage of world languages, cultures, societies, and international relations, and for the high level of its research and education in these fields.

Mineo Nakajima
(Ph.D. in International Relations),
President, Tokyo University of Foreign Studies

TUFS at a glance

Tokyo University of Foreign Studies (TUFS) is a national university offering undergraduate and graduate programs related to the study of world languages, cultures and societies, and international relations. TUFS currently holds within its organization the Faculty of Foreign Studies, covering seven regions of study and twenty-six major languages and areas of specialization, the Graduate School of Area and Culture Studies, the Japanese Language Center for International Students, and the Institute for the Study of Languages and Cultures of Asia and Africa.

TUFS is the oldest institution in the field of international studies in Japan, and boasts a large number of graduates who play an active part in international exchange and academic research today. TUFS has always maintained and still continues to hold a unique role as a leading center of excellence in international studies, research and exchange.

A hundred years and more of history

In essence, the University is the oldest institution in the field of international studies in Japan, first constituted in 1899 as an independent educational and research institution as Tokyo Gaikokugo Gakko (Tokyo School of Foreign Languages), but with more distant antecedents in a government institute for translation, Bansho Shirabesho (Institute for Research of Foreign Documents) whose history can be traced back as far as 1857. With a focus on the translation of books from European languages (in particular, Portuguese, Spanish, and, latterly, Dutch, English, German and French), this Institute played a key role as a unique window on the outside world during Japan's period of isolation from other countries. The work of the Institute may be said to have prepared the ground for the massive influx of Western ideas occasioned by the Meiji Restoration of 1868, following which—adding educational functions to its previous research-oriented mission—the Institute consolidated its leading role as a focal point for international studies and exchange. The name "Tokyo School of Foreign Languages" was first applied in 1873. After twelve years during which the School was absorbed within the Tokyo Commercial School, it was restored in 1897, and re-established on a firm footing as an independent educational institution in 1899. During the Second World War, the University was renamed "Tokyo College of Foreign Affairs," and in 1949 the University gained its present name: "Tokyo University of Foreign Studies."

The University has maintained a focus on the languages and societies of Europe and the Americas (with current provision for undergraduate and graduate studies in the following language-related areas: English, German, French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Russian, and the two recent additions of Polish and Czech). At the same time, the University has continuously developed and now provides strongly for Middle Eastern and Asian studies, with studies related to Chinese (since 1899) and Hindi (since 1911) having been established relatively early on in the University's history, and current provision also including Korean, Mongolian, Indonesian, Malaysian, Philippine, Thai, Laotian, Vietnamese, Cambodian, Burmese, Urdu, Arabic, Persian and Turkish studies. In addition, Japanese studies have been catered for since 1968, under the impetus of a perceived need for international exchange with non-Japanese students. In 1964, the Institute for the Study of the Languages and Cultures of Asia and Africa was affiliated with the University as a research facility to be used by personnel at all national institutions of higher learning. The University also contains within its organization (although not within its central campus) the Japanese Language Center for International Students, a national facility providing preparatory Japanese language training for students from abroad and engaging in research and materials development for the purpose of contributing significantly to the education of non-Japanese students in Japan.

In earlier days, research and teaching at the University was focused mainly on language description and literary studies, but since the 1960s linguistics, culture and area studies have gained increasing importance. While the University continues to maintain its traditional emphasis on intensive language study as a prelude to further studies based on primary sources in the language of specialization, a major reform of the undergraduate curriculum in 1995 has introduced a greater emphasis on early development of the discipline-related knowledge and abilities needed to pursue specialized studies in a particular field of interest. Apart from majoring in a language area of specialization, undergraduate students now choose to follow one of three discipline-based programs: in language and information studies, culture and literary studies, or area and international studies.

Having reached the milestone of 1999, the 100th anniversary of its independence as well as the 126th anniversary of its original establishment, and with an imminent move to a modern, expanded campus, Tokyo University of Foreign Studies is uniquely placed to maintain its leading role as a center of excellence in international studies, research and exchange into and beyond the 21st century.

International students at TUFS

The international atmosphere of TUFS is considerably enhanced by the large numbers of students from other countries who choose to study here. Recently the ISEPTUFS program (described below) has made it possible for students from partner institutions to stay for a relatively short period and gain credits for courses which can be transferred to their home university, while the well-established Japanese Studies course for international students continues to produce graduates of high calibre who frequently go on to assume positions of responsibility in their home countries, strengthening these countries' links with Japan.

Undergraduate students

As of May 1999 there are 127 international students enrolled in undergraduate programs at TUFS, almost all of whom are taking the Japanese Studies course. There are special procedures for admission to undergraduate studies for international students, which are described in detail on p. 11. Currently the majority of students are from China or the Republic of Korea, but past and present students have come from various parts of the world. Many graduates of the Japanese Studies course have returned to their home countries to take up Japanese teaching posts in their home countries, often at tertiary level.

ISEPTUFS

The International Student Exchange Program of Tokyo University of Foreign Studies (ISEPTUFS) is designed to give students from international partner institutions (see p. 36) an opportunity to study at TUFS by enrolling in a special one-year academic program. This is a new program of courses taught in English and other foreign languages and aims to foster international exchange among students of different nationalities by providing an opportunity for foreign students to live and study in Japan. It is also intended to provide students with the valuable chance to meet and build friendships with students from all over the world. Currently 31 students are enrolled in this program. ISEPTUFS will be linked into the UMAP (University Mobility in Asia and the Pacific) credit transfer scheme in 2000.

Graduate students

There are currently a total of 148 international students enrolled in graduate programs at TUFS (117 in the Master's Program and 31 in the Doctoral Program). Out of this total, 21 are in receipt of Japanese government scholarships.

Other research and study arrangements

There are a number of other arrangements for studying at TUFS as an international student, including as a research student under the personal supervision of a member of the academic staff (currently there are 159 students in this category at TUFS) or as a Japanese studies or teacher training student.

Welcoming international students

The Student Exchange Division of the University looks after international students at the Nishigahara campus, and arranges numerous excursions, activities, symposia and international exchange activities with local community organizations for such students. There is also an International Hall of residence (see p. 31) which provides accommodation at a reasonable price for some students.

Japanese Language Center for International Students

This Center (which is located away from the central campus, in Fuchu) is described in detail on pp. 24-27 of this guide. One of the main functions of the Center is to provide international students on Japanese Government scholarships with a six month or one year course of preparatory education (with a focus on Japanese language development) prior to their entrance into a Japanese national university. Currently there are 70 international students taking courses at the Center.

Faculty Of Foreign Studies (Undergraduate Degree Studies)

Curriculum

Every undergraduate applicant chooses one of seven regions of study: European and American Studies I, European and American Studies II, Russian and East European Studies, East Asian Studies, Southeast Asian Studies, South and West Asian Studies, or Japanese Studies. Every faculty member belongs to one of three divisions, each offering independent programs: the Program of Language and Information Studies, the Program of Culture and Literary Studies, and the Program of Area and International Studies. All students begin to specialize in one of these programs at the beginning of their second year.

This variegated curriculum allows students to learn about language, culture, society and international relations from a broad perspective, with their major language forming the core of their studies. At the same time, in choosing one of the three programs, students are expected to acquire the academic principles and skills relevant to pursuing their specialized, discipline-related interests.

Programs Offered

1) Language and Information Studies: Students study various theories pertaining to studies of language with reference to ethnicity, society, history, and culture. Students may also choose to study the basics as well as the application of information science.

2) Culture and Literary Studies: Students study the foundations, structure, and characteristics of different cultures, along with historical background and concepts bound to culture. Literary studies are also focused on in this program.

3) Area and International Studies: Students examine the principles of the international law system and international relations, as well as analyze the characteristics, structure, dynamics, and other aspects of different areas from the points of view suggested by the political sciences, sociology, economics, and history.

Courses Offered (with number of credits required for graduation)

* Language Courses

1) Major Language: Students select one major language to study intensively from the time they enter the university. This major language forms the basis for students' academic activities throughout the four years of study (28 credits).

2) Minor Language(s): Students learn one or more minor languages, partly for the purpose of acquiring the ability to objectively and comparatively view the knowledge of their major language (8 credits).

3) Research Languages: Students may study an additional language, such as a classical language, partly in order to experience language diversity and deepen their understanding of languages in general.

* Area-Related Courses

1) Basic: Students learn the basic characteristics of language, culture and society in their chosen area of studies (8 credits).

2) Advanced: Students develop specialized knowledge and deepen their understanding of language, culture and society in their chosen area of studies (12 credits).

* Discipline-Related Courses

1) Basic: Introductory courses are offered for the three programs. These courses help students decide which program they will specialize in (12 credits).

2) Advanced: Advanced courses corresponding to each program are offered (24 credits).

* Interdisciplinary Courses

Students gain general knowledge required in modern society and deal with interdisciplinary issues (14 credits, including 2 in physical education).

* Elective Courses

Students select additional courses freely. These courses are credited as courses related to their major area of studies or as interdisciplinary courses (12 credits).

* Teacher Preparation Courses

Special courses are offered for those students who want to obtain the certificate for teaching at junior or senior high schools in Japan.

Certificates for the following subjects are offered: foreign languages, including English, French, Spanish, Chinese, and others; Japanese; social studies; geography and history; and komin (senior high school level economics, political studies, philosophy, law, etc.). Students are required to take subject courses as well as general teaching courses to obtain the certificate.

Requirements for graduation

Students in the Faculty of Foreign Studies are required to be enrolled for at least four years, to select one of the three programs of specialization, and to earn at least 126 course credits. Those who fulfill these requirements are graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree.

One credit is equivalent to 45 hours of class and extra-class study: 15 weeks of lectures, one session a week; 15 weeks of language practice, two sessions a week; or 15 weeks of laboratory work and/or fieldwork, three sessions a week. The breakdown of the 126 credits required for graduation is as detailed above.

Admission

Entrance into the University takes place in early April. All Japanese applicants must take both the National Center Test (NCT) (in four subjects consisting of Japanese, one foreign language, social studies and mathematics) conducted by the government for all national and public university applicants in January each year and the university's own entrance examination held in February and March each year.

The February examination consists of a test in one designated foreign language, while applicants opting for the March examination take a foreign language test plus two essay writing tests. Foreign nationals are exempted from the NCT, but must have passed (1) the Japanese Language Proficiency Test ("Nihongo Noryoku Shiken") at level 1 in December of the previous year and (2) the General Examination for Foreign Students ("Toitsu Shiken"), also held in December. They must then take the university's March examination (described above). On the other hand, foreign nationals wishing to enter the Department of Japanese Studies are exempted from the NCT, the General Examination for Foreign Students and the university's entrance examinations as described above, but must take a special examination in Japanese language, Japanese history and one foreign language (other than their mother tongue) held by the university in February.

Faculty of Foreign Studies Research Institutes

Academic staff in the Faculty of Foreign Studies often choose to participate in the research activities of the following attached facilities.

Institute of Foreign Affairs

The Institute of Foreign Affairs was established in 1954, with a view to researching the prevailing political, economic, social and cultural conditions in each area of the world. Its activities include sponsoring research studies, collecting materials necessary for such studies, publishing an annual journal and other reports, and holding study meetings and lectures. Since 1976 the following three kinds of research papers have been published under grants provided by the Ministry of Education:

- 1) Research papers based on a common research theme;
- 2) Research papers written by individual members of the Institute;
- 3) Reviews of important new books in area studies.

Institute of Language Research

The Institute of Language Research was established in 1956, for the purpose of investigating the living languages of each area of the world and researching methods of language teaching. Its activities include collecting, preserving, and utilizing books and data necessary for research, and publishing an annual journal and other reports, and holding conferences, seminars and exhibitions. Regular meetings for study and discussion are held almost every month. The linguistic studies at the Institute have come to deal with far more languages than are regularly taught at the University, including languages rarely investigated in the past. Furthermore, in line with the development of various kinds of computerized equipment for processing language data, studies making use of these new technological innovations have also increased.

Institute of Transcultural Studies

The Institute of Transcultural Studies was established in 1996. The Institute aims to conduct research into the traditions and prevailing conditions of culture, literature, art, and the humanities of each region of the world. Its activities are being carried out on the basis of the following core projects:

- 1) Traditions and innovations in literature;
- 2) Universality and regionalism in 20th century cultural representation;
- 3) Principles and methods of intercultural studies;
- 4) Influence of the information revolution on paradigm shift in the humanities.

Audio-Visual Education Center

The Audio-Visual Education Center was opened in 1980. Continuous efforts have been made to increase the Center's capabilities through the installation of new systems and equipment. The Center plays an important role in helping the university fulfill its basic aims by promoting the study of foreign languages and cultures through audio-visual media.

At present the Center's tape library comprises about 9,000 tapes (including 2,500 video tapes) covering more than 30 languages. The number of classes making use of the facilities is increasing every year. The content of classes has been enriched, and instructional methods diversified. In the self-access room, 30 video booths and 20 computer booths are provided where students can learn at their own pace. Furthermore, CNN, Russian TV, and STAR TV of Hong Kong are received through the satellite dishes of the Center. High-speed stereo cassette printers are also installed for students' use in the self-access room. Other facilities of the Center include 100-inch high-resolution projection screen systems and a video production studio.

Graduate School of Area And Culture Studies (Master's Degree Studies)

Curriculum

Every applicant to the Master's program chooses one of seven regions of specialization, numbered I, II and III for Europe and the Americas and I, II and III, plus Japan, for Asia. These seven areas correspond broadly to those in the undergraduate curriculum.

In addition, at the time of application, students must choose one of the following discipline-related programs.

Programs offered

Students are accepted into one of the following programs:

1) Language and Culture Studies

The aim of the Language and Culture Studies program is to enhance knowledge about languages of the world, and to develop a broad and deep appreciation of the language and culture of specialization.

2) Area Studies

In this program, studies are conducted in order to clarify the uniqueness or the special characteristics of the society, the economy or the culture of the area in question. The area's relations vis-a-vis other areas are also examined.

3) International Exchange

The main aim of this program is to engage students in comparison of cultures and the study of international relations between countries, without limitation to one particular area.

Courses offered (with number of credits required for graduation)

1) Language and Culture Studies

*Common courses (4 credits).

*Intensive language studies (4 credits).

*Language-related courses: literature, linguistic culture, area studies (12 credits).

2) Area Studies

*Common courses (4 credits).

*Intensive language studies (4 credits).

*Language-related courses: literature, linguistic culture, area studies (12 credits, including 8 credits for thesis).

3) International Exchange

*Common courses (16 credits, including 8 credits for thesis).

*Intensive language studies (4 credits).

*Language-related courses: literature, linguistic culture, area studies. (0 credits).

Requirements for graduation

Students in the Graduate School of Area and Culture Studies (Master's Degree Studies) are required to be enrolled for at least two years, to earn at least 30 course credits, to submit a satisfactory Master's thesis and to pass the oral examination on it.

Those who satisfy these requirements are awarded the Master's Degree (shushi) in (a) Linguistics, (b) Literature, (c) International Studies or (d) Humanities, depending on the courses chosen.

Admission

Entrance into the university takes place in early April.

1) Language and Culture

Both written and oral examinations take place in February. Subjects of the written examination are: one language of specialization, a second foreign language, and linguistics/literature.

2) Area Studies

Both written and oral examinations take place in October. The written examination is conducted on one of the designated languages or the language of the area of specialization (excluding the applicant's mother tongue), and the oral examination is an interview in Japanese mainly on the paper and the study plan submitted at the time of application. The oral examination is conducted only for those who have passed the written examination.

3) International Exchange

Both written and oral examinations take place in October. The written examination is conducted on two foreign languages (other than the applicant's mother tongue), and the oral examination, for those applicants who have passed the written examination, consists of an interview mainly in Japanese on the study plan submitted at the time of application, and some discussion in the applicant's registered language of specialization except the mother tongue.

Graduate School of Area And Cultural Studies (Doctoral Degree Studies)

Aims

The Doctoral Program includes both linguistic and cultural studies relating to more than 30 different languages of the world, and area studies of the countries and regions of Europe, the Americas, East Asia, Southeast Asia, South Asia, the Middle East, Africa, Oceania and Japan. The Doctoral Program also includes international cultural studies focusing on transcultural research. The program's objective is to provide truly unique and advanced training and research opportunities in order to produce creative scholars and specialists for the teaching and research professions.

Requirements for award of degree

Students in the Graduate School of Area and Culture Studies (Doctoral Degree Studies) are required to be enrolled for at least three years, to earn at least 12 course credits, to submit a satisfactory Doctoral thesis and to pass the oral examination on it.

Those who satisfy these requirements are awarded the degree of Doctor of Philosophy (gakujutsu hakushi).

Admission

Entrance into the university takes place in early April. Both written and oral examinations take place in February for those who have passed an initial documentary screening. The written examination is conducted on a foreign language of specialization other than the applicant's mother tongue and an additional foreign language likewise, other than the applicant's mother tongue). The oral examination is conducted on the applicant's major written paper and study plan submitted at the time of application. Oral examination in a third language may be conducted, if necessary, at the same time. Only those who already have, or expect to have within the Japanese academic year, a Master's degree from a Japanese or foreign institution, or those who have been recognized as having an equivalent qualification either by the Ministry of Education or by the university's graduate school, are eligible to apply.

Academic Staff

Note: almost all members of academic staff in the Faculty of Foreign Studies teach both undergraduate and graduate courses, while members of the Graduate School teach only graduate courses. Members of staff of Associate Professor rank and higher may undertake Master's thesis supervision.

Description

The Japanese Language Center for International Students (henceforth, "the Center") is an educational and research institute which serves the academic needs of international students on Japanese government scholarships. It also furthers the establishment of a world-wide network of Japanese language teachers.

The Center started its operations in April 1992, following the integration of two intramural institutions: the Japanese Language School, which had been engaged in pre-college education for international students on Monbusho (Japanese Ministry of Education) scholarships over the preceding 24 years, and the Foreign Students Teaching Materials Development Center, which had operated as an interdepartmental research center for international student education since 1986.

Organization

The Center comprises the following four functional units:

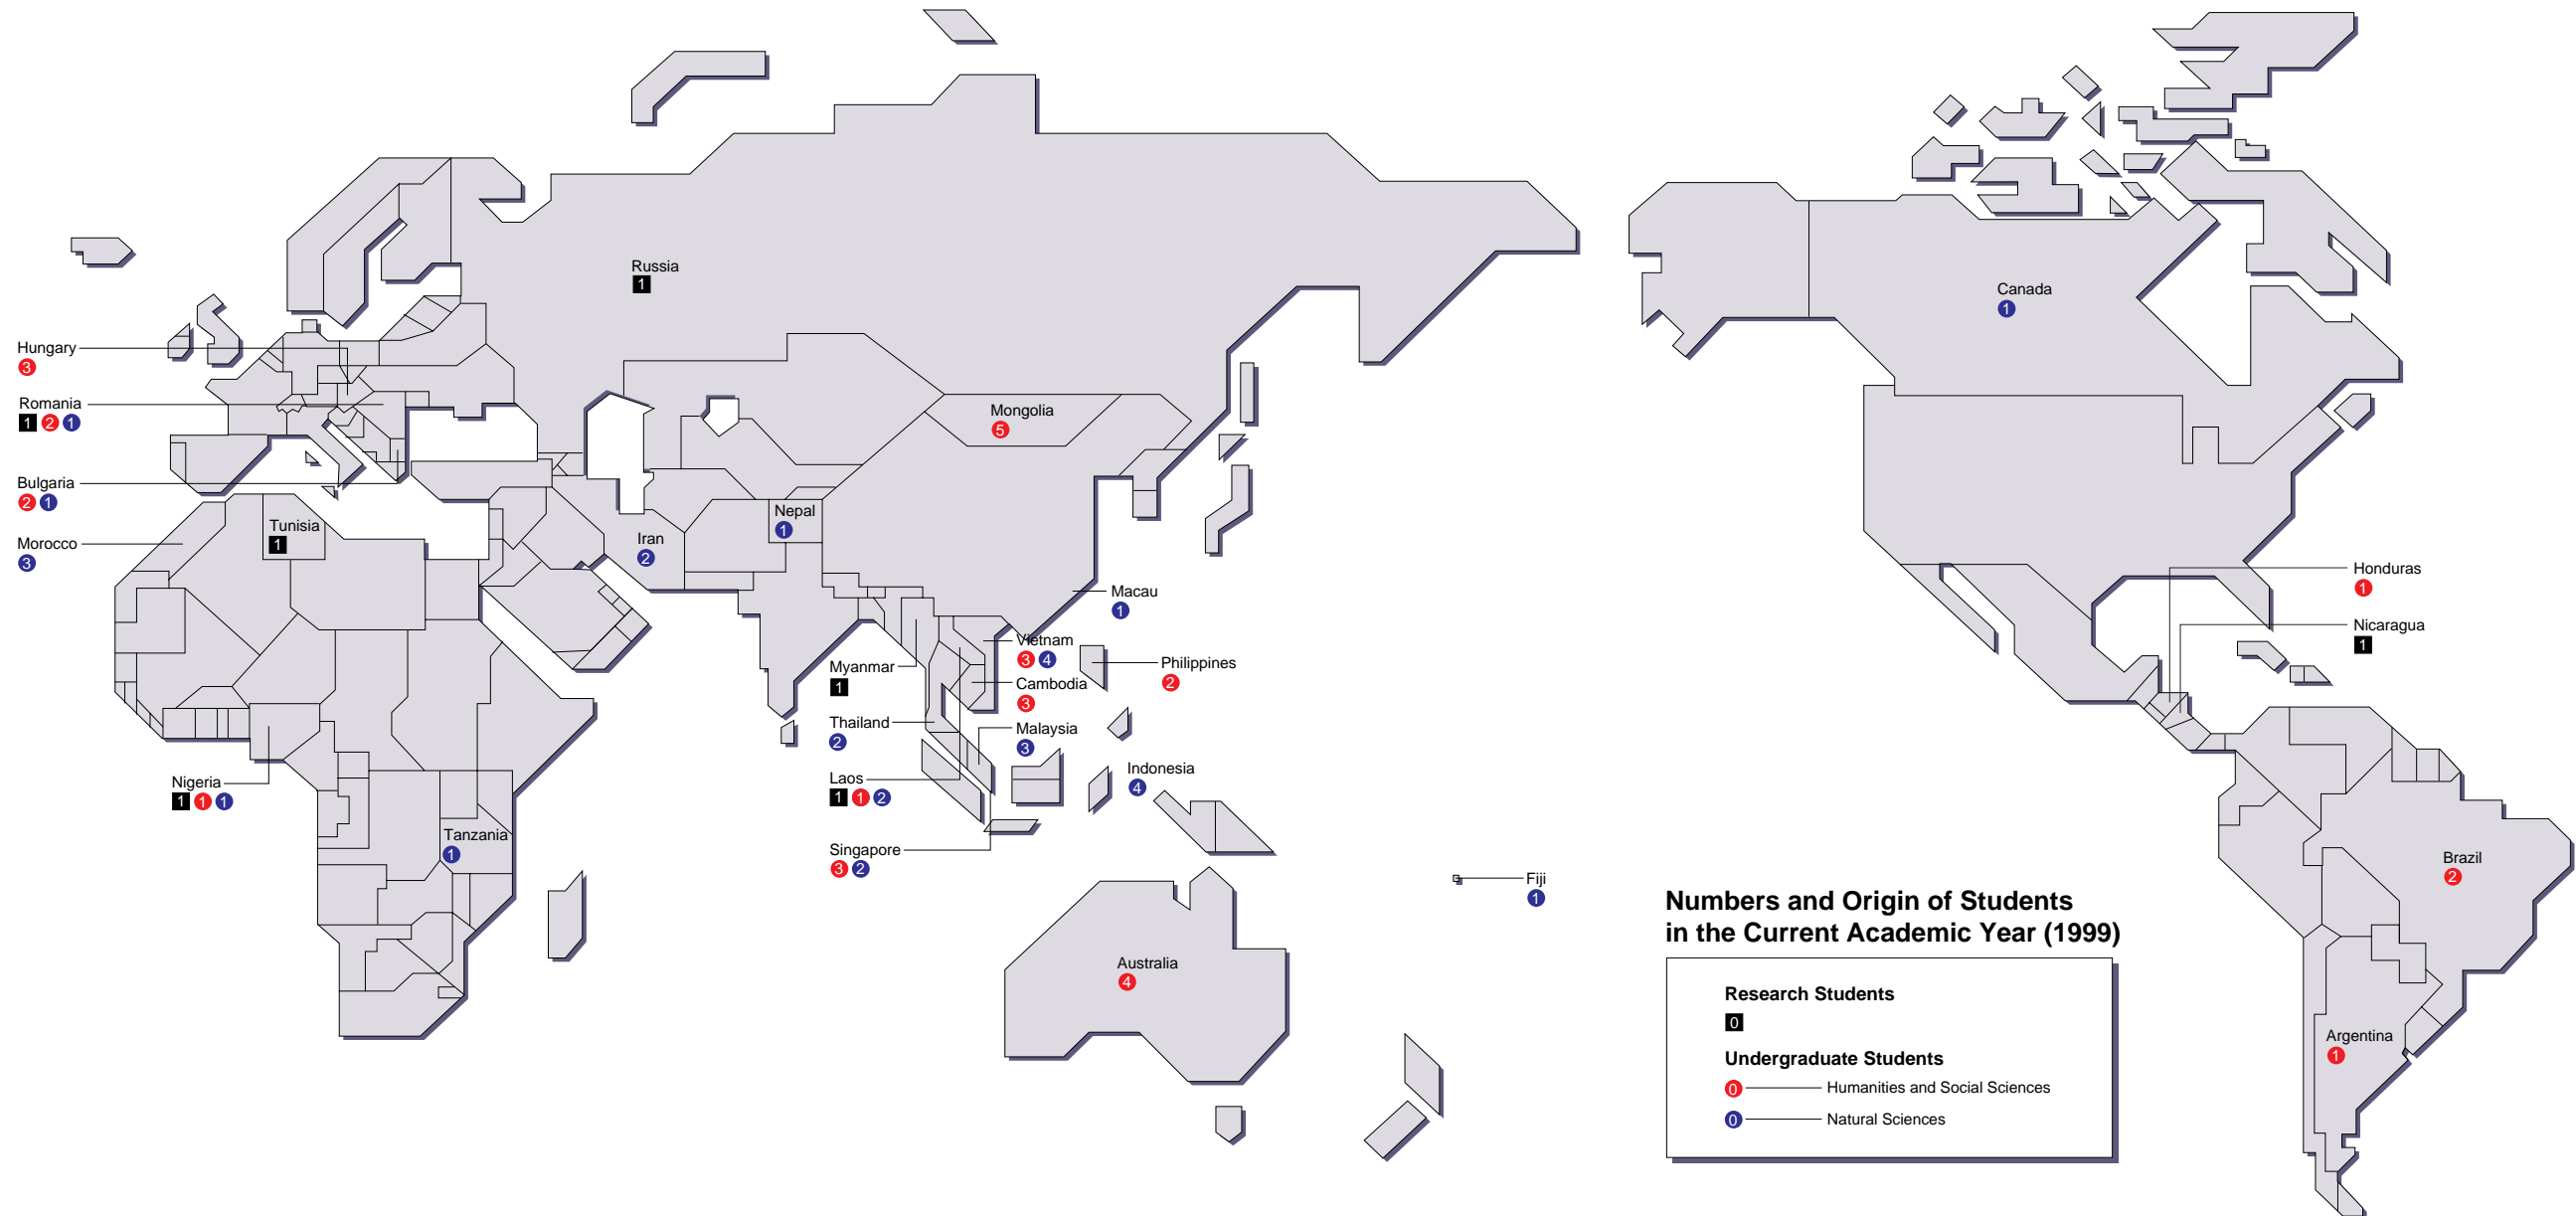

- 1) Division of Japanese Teaching and Academic Studies
- 2) Division of Planning and Promoting Japanese Language Teaching
- 3) Division of Student Affairs
- 4) Administrative Office

Division of Japanese Teaching and Academic Studies

This division, as its primary function, provides international students on Monbusho scholarships with six-month or one year preparatory education prior to their entry into Japanese national universities. Students studying at the Center fall into two main categories: those who go on to undergraduate programs and those who go on to graduate programs. The former reside in a school dormitory (total occupancy of 60) on the campus and study at the Center for the entire academic year, while the latter take a six-month intensive program in the Japanese language. The courses offered include intensive training in the Japanese language and, for the pre-undergraduate students, basic courses in major academic fields necessary for pursuing undergraduate studies.

The division also conducts research to develop effective teaching methods and materials, including CALL (Computer-Assisted Language Learning) materials and various types of audio-visual aid.

Division of Planning and Promoting Japanese Language Teaching

Activities of this division include planning and implementing training programs for Japanese language teachers, assisting domestic and foreign public institutions in their Japanese language programs, and establishing a world-wide network of Japanese language teachers.

There are two projects currently being undertaken:

1) Sending Center staff to a graduate program at Tung-pei Teachers' College, Jilin Province, China, to assist the local teachers in teaching Japanese to Chinese students who will come to Japan to enter graduate programs at Japanese universities.

Period: February to September annually

2) Implementing a Japanese teacher training program for teachers at Japanese public schools who will be sent abroad to teach Japanese on the Monbusho-supported program called "REX" (Regional and Educational Exchanges for Mutual Understanding). The training program is conducted annually from mid-April to mid-July.

Division of Student Affairs

Two counsellors are assigned to this division to help the students live and study in a physically and mentally sound condition. Their duties include rendering counselling services to the students, giving advice to the student committee, planning and implementing recreational activities on- and off-campus and liaising with the local community

Institute for the Study of Languages and Cultures of Asia and Africa (ILCAA)

Main Activities

ILCAA was founded on April 1, 1964, following a recommendation by the Science Council of Japan in 1961. It was the first inter-university national research institution to be designated in the humanities and social sciences, and its primary purpose is to promote multi-disciplinary research on languages and cultures of Asia and Africa, compilation of dictionaries, and education relating to those languages.

In addition to supporting individual research by institute members, ILCAA encourages inter-university scholarship and engages in research projects involving non-members.

Every year ILCAA offers short-term intensive language courses in three Asian and African languages to members of the general public. (On average, 10 students undertake 150 hours in each language.)

Since overseas field research is also encouraged, young scholars of ILCAA are enabled to spend two years abroad for the purpose of developing their language skills and conducting research in their areas of study.

The Institute underwent reorganization in 1991, whereby sixteen small sections were integrated into four major sections, with an expansion in the section for non-Japanese visiting faculty. This reform was designed to cater better for changing academic and social needs, social change in Asia and Africa, and development in research methods.

Collaborative Research Projects

1. Cross-linguistic Studies of Phonology
2. Studies on Linguistic and Cultural Contacts
3. Comparative Studies of Travel and Representations
4. Research on CAI Programs in Asian and African Languages Using a Multimedia Database
5. Comprehensive Studies of the Tai Cultural Area
6. History of the Non-Han Peoples of Southwest China
7. Social Change and International Relations in Modern East Asia
8. AFLANG
9. Research on Coded Character-sets and Collating Sequences in Multi-lingual Environments
10. Anthropological Studies of Ideology
12. Politics and Caste in Post-Independence India
13. The Question of the Significance of the 20th Century for Southeast Asia
14. Transitivity and Actancy Systems in Syntactic Typology
15. Towards Construction of Electronic Dictionaries for Asian and African Languages
16. Studies on the Historical Iranian World
17. State and Religion in Post-Independence African Countries
18. Historical Development in the Islamic World: A Case Study of the Ottoman Empire
19. Al-Afghani and Modern History of the Muslim World
20. Human Flow in Insular Southeast Asia
21. Research on the History of Fontography Typefaces
22. Asian and African Language Acquisition Programme

Information Resources Center

As a part of the Institute, an Information Resources Center was established in 1997 with an initial tenure of 10 years. Its main purpose is to process information resources of languages and cultures of Asia and Africa mainly in the form of storage, compilation, and publication with a view to developing inter-institutional and international academic exchange. The Center is constructing a "Digital Museum of Languages and Cultures", to be accessed through internet. This Digital Museum not only presents a digital library of linguistic, cultural and historical data but also makes available insights into the theoretical and technical aspects of building such libraries.

Facilities

Computer facilities

In the past few years, the computer facilities in TUFS have been greatly improved. The improvement shows itself in two main areas. One is the opening of a classroom in which lessons can be conducted using computers. This room has thirty-two Macintosh computers, on which both Windows and MacOS can be run, with four laser printers and internet access. In addition, these computers can deal with most of the languages which students major in at TUFS. Students can also use the room for private study whenever classes are not being held.

The other innovation is a new computer room for overseas students, where they can use e-mail facilities, Web browsers, and other basic software. The staff in this room help overseas students contact their friends and families at home across the world.

Health Administration Center

The Health Administration Center was set up in 1972 for the purpose of preserving and promoting the health of students and staff of the university. Its constituent members are a medical doctor (a specialist in internal medicine), a psychologist and a registered nurse.

The functions of the Center include: (1) conducting studies on health administration, (2) making plans for health administration and practice, (3) holding both regular and scheduled health check-ups and suggesting appropriate treatments, depending on the results, (4) offering advice and first aid, (5) providing counselling on mental health, (6) providing guidance and support for intra-university environmental sanitation and the prevention of contagious diseases, (7) education on personal hygiene, and (8) other services necessary for the promotion of good health.

Office hours: 9:00-17:00 (Monday to Friday) Staff, with fields of research:
ENDO, Makoto (Professor, Director)
Clinical psychology; Psychotherapy for speech-handicapped children
INOUE, Tetsufumi (Associate Professor)
Rheumatology; Allergology; Inflammatology;
Clinical immunology; Internal medicine

International Hall of Residence

The TUFS International Hall, located at 3-8-12 Nishiogu, Arakawa-ku, Tokyo, within 30 minutes' ride from the university campus, was opened in April 1985. The Hall has two buildings: the residential building for non-

Japanese scholars and students and the common building which houses offices, meeting rooms and a lounge. The residential building contains 80 rooms (70 single rooms, 5 for couples and 5 for families). The rooms are all air-conditioned and furnished, and have separate kitchens and unit baths. The rooms for couples and families are also equipped with washing machines and dryers. There are laundry rooms on the first and third floors. The Japanese-style room, located in the common building, provides an opportunity for visitors to experience aspects of Japanese traditional culture such as flower arrangement and tea ceremony.

The period of residence allowed in the International Hall is from one month up to one year for researchers and up to one year for students. In addition to paying the rental fee for their room, each resident is required to pay a deposit and his or her own bill for gas, water and electricity. See the tables below for the rental fees for different categories of rooms (as of 1999).

1) For non-Japanese students

Room type	Monthly Rental Fee
Family suite	14,200 Yen
Twin room	9,500 Yen
Single room	3,300 Yen

2) For non-Japanese scholars

Room type	Monthly Rental Fee
Family suite	20,260 Yen / 21,645 Yen / 39,274 Yen
Twin room	12,324 Yen / 13,303 Yen
Single room	5,861 Yen

Boarding Fee - This fee must be paid by the end of the month at the Accounting Section window (2nd floor of Bldg. 5) of the university. Even if a resident vacates the Hall before the end of the month, a full month's boarding fee must still be paid.

Rental Fee - This fee may either be withdrawn from a researcher's salary automatically or be paid to a specified bank account once notice of payment has been received. If a researcher vacates the Hall in mid-month, a per diem charge will be assessed (including day of entry and withdrawal).

University Library

The Collection

As of 1999, the University Library contains approximately 499,000 books and 5,900 periodicals ranging over more than 100 languages. Further details of the collection are presented below.

Hours

The Library is open during the following hours:

- Monday-Friday
9:00-20:00 (9:00-17:00 during vacations)
- Saturday
9:00-16:30 (closed during vacations)

The Library is closed on Sundays and national holidays throughout the year.

Facilities

The Library is a seven-story building. The main entrance and the circulation desk are on the 4th floor, where the card catalogue system and the periodical and reference collections are also located. The 5th floor and above contain open-shelf collections where visitors may browse at will. The 3rd floor and below consist of stacks from which books may be obtained via the circulation desk.

There are reading tables on each open floor. The Study Hall on the 3rd floor also has 70 carrels.

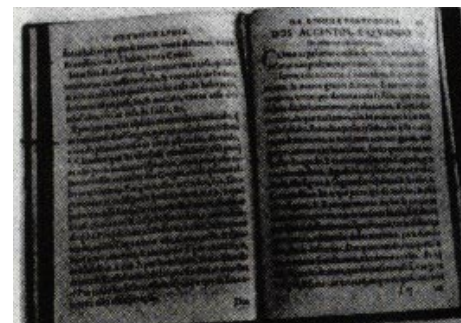

Rare Books and Donations

The Library has a rare book collection of 1,262 titles, including Japanese books on foreign affairs and foreign language studies published prior to the Meiji period.

There are also several privately donated collections. The Morooka Library is the largest of these, consisting of 8,300 Chinese documents.

This early work on Russian grammar, edited in 1755 by M. Remonosov, is one of the few originals remaining in the world.

Nunez de Liao, Orthographia da Lingoa Portuguesa, 1576, Lisbon. The 16th century "Orthography of the Portuguese Language" by Nunez de Liao is an indispensable source for research on the history of the Portuguese language.

Extracurricular Activities

Apart from their studies, TUFS students devote considerable energy to extracurricular activities. Currently, the university has 40 culture-related clubs and 43 sports clubs. Within the culture-related clubs, there are many international students who participate in such traditional Japanese arts as tea ceremony, koto, and calligraphy. Students also have the opportunity to join various sports groups including such martial arts clubs as judo, karate, kendo and archery.

Every November, students organize a week-long culture festival. The main campus is transformed and filled with visitors as students cook and serve food, perform plays, demonstrate dances and play music from many areas of the world.

Food and Shopping

TUFS has a cafeteria and a general store on the main campus. Everyday items as well as books, stationery and magazines are available.

International Cooperation And Exchange

Tokyo University of Foreign Studies currently has cooperation and exchange agreements with the following institutions:

New Campus

In consideration of contemporary developments in global communications and international exchange, Tokyo University of Foreign Studies is intent on maintaining and enhancing its role as a leader and facilitator of advanced academic research and education into the 21st century.

To better fulfill this role, the university plans to move to a new location with a larger campus area and improved facilities. The new campus will be located in Fuchu-shi, which lies in the western part of Tokyo. The transfer will take place during the years 2000 to 2002. The whole construction of the new campus will be completed in 2004.
